Setting a local and regional agenda
for food justice.

A partnership conference bringing together practitioners, businesses, policy-makers, community organisations and advocates

12-5pm, Friday 7th Nov 2014
St Mary's Community Centre
Bramall Lane, Sheffield, S2 4QZ

Food justice is traditionally seen as a global issue, but over recent years has been gaining an increasing profile closer to home. At least 350,000 people in the UK resorted to emergency food last year, and up to 4.7m people could be described as in food poverty (Trussell Trust 2013). With the so-called diseases of affluence more prevalent in the UK's poorer communities, it is clear that food justice is not only an important issue for the UK but also a complex one.

This conference has been organised by the South Yorkshire Local Authority University Network (SYLAUN) to bring together leading researchers with practitioners, businesses, policy-makers, community organisations and advocates.

The aim is to identify what we already know about food justice, and what we need to learn in order to tackle it at the local/regional level. By the end of the conference, participants will have agreed the most important questions on this issue and identified actions to take forward together.

The conference is free – but we do ask for your active participation on the day. To book your place, please visit:
